

The Clever Crow

On a scorching summer afternoon, a thirsty crow flew over a barren landscape in search of water. His throat was parched, and the sun blazed fiercely above. He flew from one place to another, scanning the ground for any sign of water, but everything seemed dry and lifeless.

Just when he was about to give up, he noticed a clay pot lying under a tree. Curious and hopeful, he flew down and looked inside. To his joy, he saw some water at the bottom. But there was a problem — the water level was too low, and his beak couldn't reach it.

The crow didn't panic. He sat and thought for a moment. Then, he had an idea. He started picking up small pebbles nearby and dropped them one by one into the pot. Slowly, the water level began to rise. With each pebble, the water got closer to the top. Finally, the crow was able to drink the water and quench his thirst.

He looked up at the sky, satisfied and proud of his clever solution, and then flew away.
